LEARNING STYLES

Language learner types by Keith Willing (1987):

- Convergers are solitary, pragmatic, independent and confident in their abilities. They avoid groups.
- Conformists prefer to emphasize learning about language over learning to use it. They tend to be dependent on those in authority and are perfectly happy to work in non-communicative classrooms.
- Concrete learners like to learn from direct experience in the classroom. They are pragmatic and value the practical use of language. They eagerly participate in group work.
- Communicative are comfortable out of class and show a willingness to take risks. They are much more interested in social interaction with other speakers of the language than they are with analysis of how the language works.

Can you say more about that?

What evidence did you use for that decision?

What would be an example?

Can you explain this part to me?

Who else on your team has another idea?

Fostering young learners' listening and speaking skills

Yasemin Kirkgöz

Introduction

In an increasingly globalised world proficiency in English, the world's lingua franca, is perceived by many non-English-speaking countries as vital to professional communication, delivering long-term economic development and improving quality of opportunities for young people (Enever 2011). The response to the ever-increasing demand for English has led to pressure on governments 'to ensure there is an English speaking workforce' (Garton et al. 2011, p. 4). Along with this, there has been a growing tendency among many Asian countries to reform language education systems and introduce English at earlier ages in

What is TPR? = Total Physical Response

- physical movement is used to react to verbal input
- “Listen and respond”
- best with young/beginner students supported by other methods
- can be used with expressions, vocabulary, grammar, stories, songs, role plays and so on

Total Physical Response

Why is TPR effective?

- Focus on input
- Focus on comprehension
- Focus on meaning
- Listening before production
- Similar to natural acquisition
- Acquisition (unconscious) over learning (conscious)
- Reduces stress and inhibition
- Teacher can check responses

Total Physical Response

How to use in the classroom...

- T/F or guessing games (e.g. vocabulary)
- Team games (competition or cooperation)
- Speed games (time limit)
- Use with other materials (flashcards, realia...)
- Acting and retelling stories
- Checking comprehension of songs

What does the teacher do differently at the beginning and at the end of the TPR activity?

1. Say expression and show the actions
2. Say expression without showing action (take away scaffolding)
3. Mix the order of expressions
4. (Not included) Ask a student to say the expression

How is TPR used as a step within the lesson?

TPR is a scaffolding step to introduce the textbook expressions before opening the textbook. This has the benefit of pre-teaching meaning and giving exposure before the textbook listening activity.

Materials for early language learning

Irma-Kaarina Ghosn

You can choose any topics in this reading (with or without added questions) to include in your discussion board post.

Introduction

Since English language teaching (ELT) was introduced into grade school curricula, the onset of instruction has usually been around age eleven or above. However, the early 1990s saw a push in Europe to lower the onset of foreign language (FL) instruction, and the same trend has since been observed in many countries outside Europe. In the early twenty-first century, ELT found its way also into pre-school and even into nursery classes. Following the European framework, Teaching English to Very Young Learners (TEVYL) refers to three- to six-year-olds and Teaching English to Young Learners (TEYL) refers to seven- to
